Morphological changes and inactivation of 4 strains of Salmonella typhi (Ty21, Ty113, Ty153, and Ty182) were studied by light, fluorescence, and transmission electron microscopy. The treatment of the organisms with buffers, sodium dodecyl sulfate, and hydrogen peroxide was used to extract and retain the infective form of the organisms. The effect of cooking on these 4 strains was also studied. Following pepsin treatment, 4 strains of Salmonella typhi were indistinguishable from each other, and no difference was noted in the number of organisms recovered. The processing of each organism with sodium dodecyl sulfate, hydrogen peroxide, and pH 5.8 buffer revealed that there is little difference in their morphological forms. The organisms survived after being cooked at temperatures up to 80 degrees C for 1 min in all strains, as well as after being treated with sodium dodecyl sulfate and hydrogen peroxide.
