Early nasal NK/T cell lymphoma developing in the nasal cavity of a young dog. A 3-year-old, male mixed breed dog was presented with epistaxis and nasal discharge. A cutaneous nodule was found in the nasal cavity and was excised.

Histologically, the lesion consisted of large neoplastic lymphoid cells in compact sheets, and also included dilated, congested vessels, and hyperplasia of the lymph node and epithelium. The neoplastic cells expressed CD3 and CD4 molecules. These findings were compatible with a diagnosis of nasal natural killer (NK)/T cell lymphoma, stage I. The dog was initially treated with a six-month course of prednisolone and chlorambucil, but after a 10-week period, the dog was lost to follow-up.A variety of implantable medical devices, such as pacemakers, implantable cardioverter defibrillators ("ICDs"), and neural stimulators are typically coupled to the spine via a lead extending through the patient's veins, typically the superior vena cava or one of the great veins, to a soft tissue location on or about the spinal cord, such as the epidural space. Due to the presence of the spinal cord and other sensitive tissues, the lead itself is typically quite small in diameter. Leads of this type are usually implanted with relatively high fixation, or "pedicle screws," that couple the lead wires to the spine. These screws are usually quite large (as are the anchoring nuts onto which the screws are screwed, often
