Japan only.Q: Using python and the Facebook Like Button I want to create a website that has a big like button at the top of the page. The like button is already set up and works on the official facebook website. (I have never used python, but I figure it would be pretty easy to code this.) I would like the like button to not only 'like' the current page (log in to fb and then click the like button) but have the option to be like any other page on my server. That is, the like button should be on every page on my server. (The like button uses the Facebook application API, so I would have to add the application on every page.) The structure of my site is already set up with different php files for each page. How would I go about creating the like button on every page on my server? Would it be easier to create a script that just calls '' at the bottom of every page on the server (like a template) or is there a more proper way to do this? A: I'm not sure how Facebook expects the likes to be handled. In general it doesn't make much sense to Have a Like Button on every page (Facebook API runs only once per session and no caching is done by default) If you do have a like button on every page, why don't you make it a FB app? I would start by creating a "Like" button inside the tab Register your Application (for mobile, desktop etc) Set your Settings in FB. Create a tab for your App Now you can code any PHP or HTML or whatever you want to get the most out of the likes.
