This invention relates to an arithmetic data processor which is widely used to process images and sound and a data processing system constituted by employing such an arithmetic data processor. In a conventional arithmetic data processor, since a cache memory is generally used in order to increase an access speed, a boundary area between a main memory space and a cache memory space is defined as a fixed area to be moved during a process, as is described in "Kawarabu" Vol.32, No.9, pp.34-41. However, since a boundary area between a main memory space and a cache memory space is generally fixed irrespective of the state of use of a cache memory and a main memory, when a process to be executed can be executed at least on a main memory, the following problem is posed: In such a conventional arithmetic data processor, when an arithmetic data processing is executed in the course of the execution of an instruction in a cache memory, since the execution of the arithmetic data processing is stopped, there is a problem that the access rate decreases and the execution of the arithmetic data processing cannot be executed. In order to solve such a problem, the following methods have conventionally been used: (1) A cache controller is provided and a region to be moved is selected in consideration of the execution of an arithmetic data processing in a cache memory, as described in JP-A-62-33056, JP-A-63-236658, JP-A-61-255557 and JP-A-64-12285. PA0 (2) When an arithmetic data processing is to be executed in a cache memory, an instruction to be executed is temporarily moved from a cache memory into a main memory, then the data to be processed is moved from the main memory into a cache memory in accordance with the instruction, and the processing is resumed in the cache memory as described in JP-A-62-87109. PA0 (3) A data processing to be executed is divided into a group of data to be processed in a cache memory and another group of data to be processed in a main memory and the processing is executed in a suitable manner so as to avoid decrease of the access rate when an arithmetic data processing is to be executed in a cache memory as described in JP-A-63-17640. In the method (1) described above, a cache controller is provided for each of upper-level hierarchical cache memories and a region to be moved is selected in consideration of the execution of
