With the advent of smartphones and mobile technologies, life is changing in so many ways, and almost all aspects of the human life are being driven and influenced by these technological innovations. College students are becoming lazy by spending all their time on social media and are barely learning anything from lectures. To instil discipline and impart knowledge, we have come up with an innovative take on the traditional lecture. This new model of learning and teaching is designed specifically for college students and is based on the principle of chalking and talking. It is an innovative way of engaging students in real-life learning. The College Intense Strategy encourages students to learn from examples. The lecture format is being replaced with chalking and talk. Chalking is done by keeping diagrams and other visual aids.

The students will be challenged to reproduce the diagram and explain it in detail. Endoscopic transbronchial biopsy is considered the "gold standard" for the diagnosis of interstitial lung disease. However, it is frequently performed without rigorous diagnostic criteria and over time a number of investigators have advanced further non-invasive approaches for the diagnosis of idiopathic pulmonary fibrosis. The present review will discuss the advances made in the evaluation and diagnosis of idiopathic pulmonary fibrosis, with emphasis on newer non-invasive approaches as a better alternative to invasive biopsy techniques. In all patients, careful assessment of risk/benefit ratios and attention to factors such as age, pre-test probabilities for specific diseases, and general health status are important in the decision-making process for patient management. The objective of the present proposal is to investigate the relationship between beta and gamma-adrenergic receptors and the regulation of sympathetic neurotransmission in the heart, vascular smooth muscle and peripheral tissues. The formation of a putative beta-receptor messenger RNA will be investigated in cultured cardiac myocytes and in cardiac myocytes from adult and fetal rats. The heart is chosen for these studies because the beta-receptors play a predominant role in regulating cardiac inotropism, whereas the role of adrenergic receptors in modulating cardiac output is poorly understood. Further, this technique would identify a messenger RNA formed in response to some external stimulus or state which may be associated 6d1f23a050
