

So i've had a Blade for 4years now and have had no problems with it. It is a magnificent bike. The T reg with a blade is an absolute dream to ride. I have a 1988 T reg 1300cc 6 cylinder with the "stroker" crank that you can get on some other bikes, and it works perfectly with this bike. I got it for £550, a steal. It runs absolutely fine, and does the 50cc of power that a big bike should. I feel i can ride the bike forever but i'm in the process of getting it ready for another trial period. I've done around 400miles and it just ticks over. A black, black, black bike. I give it a 10/10 for appearance, 10/10 for price, 10/10 for reliability, 10/10 for comfort, 10/10 for power and 10/10 for fun. If you're looking for a bike, look no further. Chances are you are after a XR600, BMW or Triumph, but not me. I'm after a Blade, its worth every penny. I'm aiming to get it in the top 100cc's of 1000cc's. Bought my Blade off a friend at a friends 50th birthday party in 2004 - he was thrilled as it meant he got to keep the previous owners 1,000 mile warranty! It's now over 10,000miles and still going strong. The frame, motor, suspension, engine, nearly everything, is original. I wouldn't consider changing a thing. So far, I've knocked up 800 miles and I can't even get my head around how quick it is. I've got a '98/'99 Blade with the Fox speed shock & the carbon fibre seat. Yes, it's a bit on the heavy side for my average 6ft height, but it's the best thing I've ever ridden. I bought it as a present for myself - given that I work in a corner of Italy with no decent roads, it's a great reward when I can get out on the twisty roads. The learning curve is perfect for a first scooter - too slow and I am over the handlebars - too fast, I just don't feel like I'm there. Still, you do get a feel for it very quickly. The tyres are Grip-Tech MA-18 tyres that are on the costly side, but excellent in terms of grip and mileage. I take great care of my Blade - I do all my own servicing, give it a full wash and polish every 3-4 months, park up a small tent in the boot to keep it dry, and just enjoy it as a daily tool. I've had to pay for a new backrest for it because the bike already had a new seat fitting, but it doesn't seem to have harmed the bike in any way.
