In 2020, Photoshop and Premiere are teaming up to bring more power and features to your design workflow. As we mentioned earlier, Photoshop is changing from relying on an old plugin framework to a native GPU-accelerated 3D pipeline, allowing for a new set of photo-centric design tools that can render and manipulate 3D content natively for faster, smoother results. Third-party creative software can all now leverage the new capabilities of the new framework. Adobe Photoshop is the world's preeminent professional image editing application. From the beginning, it has been the best-of-class package with the most comprehensive tools available. While Photoshop's features have been unmatched by anything else, that doesn't mean the workflows for incorporating modules like HDR and panoramas, websites, and more are as seamless as they could be, especially if you're anything short of a professional or avid photographer. Complex international markets like real estate, photography, and publishing require extensive teams to create vastly varied and difficult images for marketing and corporate needs. The new PSD Widget allows you to easily share one or more text-based panels defined in a Photoshop PSD (Design) file using the web. Show a PSD on your variety of websites and add them to your PSD file. Optionally, use networks to share your PSD file. The new Photoshop Services system gives the world's smartest platform for working with large-scale photo libraries. With Adobe Creative Cloud and Creative Cloud Libraries, you can easily share large-scale, high-quality image libraries with other users. You can also open in Photoshop Secrets, use free cloud storage, or host your library yourself with new geotagging tools and mobile apps.
